

THIS WEEK IN WASHINGTON

(by Ralph E. Church)

Chicago, Dec. 28.—In a well-organized society of "law and order" the question of constitutionality in actual writing and enactment of a law is only one function of a government. According to the theory of the division of powers upon which our governmental system is based, it is the duty and responsibility of the people's representatives in the Congress to enact such legislation as would be responsive to the changing needs and wishes of the people. Once placed upon the statute books it becomes the duty and responsibility of the executive branch of the government to enforce it and likewise it is the function of the judicial branch to interpret. One function is as important as the other. As experience has taught us, without adequate enforcement a law upon the statute book is as meaningless and without judicial interpretation there would be confusion.

This re-statement of the principles of American Government seems hardly necessary. In view of the tendency in recent years for the legislative branch of the government to delegate "quasi-legislative" powers to the executive branch, it has been the subject of much discussion. With this rapid growth of administrative legislation and administrative adjudication, authorities have seen the gradual breakdown of the traditional "separation of powers" and the development of a "government of men" to supplant a "government of laws." The New Deal Administration has often been charged with the responsibility for this development.

One of the severest charges waged against the New Deal is its apparent disregard for the American constitutional principles. In substantiation of the charge it has often been pointed out that the President has not only demanded legislation of questionable constitutionality but has gone so far as to ask the Congress to set aside the question of constitutionality in considering the legislation.

Now it is charged that the New Deal Administration is refusing to enforce a law which Congress passed and the President signed. There is no denying the fact that there is no authority vested in the President or any official of the executive branch of the government to suspend the operation of an Act of Congress. If such were the case we would truly have a "government of men" rather than a "government of laws." The laws written by the people's representatives in the Congress would be meaningless. If the operation of the law could be suspended by the President, our government would be dependent entirely upon personal will.

This recent charge arises out of the controversial Public Utility Holding Company Act, the court litigation, and the formal order of the Postmaster General to the postmasters of the United States, dated December 4, 1935, which in effect amounts to a governmental order by a Cabinet officer not to enforce the Act of Congress at this time. It is contended that even though the law itself may be unpopular and undesirable, and even though it may be the opinion of the Attorney General that it is not constitutional, so long as it remains on the statute books it is not within the power and authority of the President to suspend its operation. This must be done by Congress itself, either by way of an amendment or repeal, or by the Supreme Court.

The order of the Postmaster General which has precipitated this criticism of the Administration reads in part as follows:

"The Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 makes it unlawful for certain holding companies to use the mails for specific purposes after December 1, 1935, unless such companies are registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission. It is probable that a number of such holding companies will not register under the act."

"Whatever may be the authority, if any, of the Postmaster General to exclude from the mails matter sent in violation of the act, the Postmaster General does not intend to exclude any company from using the mails, at least not before the validity of the act is judicially determined by the Supreme Court. You will accordingly take no steps to exclude unregistered holding companies from the use of the mails."

The explanation made for this unprecedented procedure is that the Administration wishes to prevent the public utility holding companies from getting a good test case into the Supreme Court. Rather it is endeavoring to get into the Court a case of its own choosing in order that it may have the strongest grounds possible for its contentions.

Students of government vigorously state that this order of the Postmaster General, suspending the operation of a mandatory Act of Congress, is a dangerous precedent, however justified the Government may feel, in taking such action to realize its purpose. Carried to its logical conclusion it means that Congress may enact a law, the President may sign it, but when the President through his Cabinet officers suspends operation whenever he so desires, a free democracy ceases to exist and our government is simply a dictatorship. It ceases to be a "government of laws" and becomes a "government of men."

Home

It is safe to say that there are few people to whom the thought of home is not dear. It stands for companionship, affection, shelter, a place where one can throw off the cares of the world and pursue one's own bent unhindered. It provides opportunity for mutual consideration, selflessness, and reciprocal respect for the feelings and opinions of others perhaps accorded in no other way.

A home is indeed a sacred trust. There is probably nothing in our human experience whose influence is more formative. The right home atmosphere can do a great deal to offset inimical outside influences. Its training can help to plant integrity and uprightness in the youthful heart.

Indeed, there are not many who can shake off in after life the effects of a godly childhood home. Moreover, the atmosphere of a beautiful home is felt far beyond its own immediate precincts. People are naturally drawn to a household where happiness and harmony reign. Having entered it, they can go their way with new inspiration, mentally refreshed and encouraged, and thus better equipped to deal with their own individual problems. Such a home may truly become as "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

Dear as home associations are, however, to those who can constantly share them, they are perhaps still more dear to those who are compelled to pass much or most of their time away from such companionships. To-day business conditions apparently demand that a vast number of individuals shall spend many months of the year away from home. Not alone is this the case, but the occupation of many necessitates constant travel, a continual moving from place to place which forbids any settled sojourn for protracted periods of time. Such a mode of living may tend to become somewhat unsettling, and may even engender a false sense of freedom from certain responsibilities.

No matter what a person's earthly location may be, he who has grasped the fact of his spiritual at-onement with God knows that in reality he is always at home, dwelling in "the secret place of the most High," constantly enveloped by the Father's love and care. Furthermore, he realizes that this same love and care also surrounds those who are dear to him, even though many leagues may lie between them, for there can be no actual separation when thought is at one with the understanding of spiritual reality.

Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, has expressed this thought beautifully in one of her much loved hymns, where in speaking of the ever-presence of infinite Love she writes (Poems, p. 4):

"His habitation high is here, and high
His arm encircles me, and mine, and all."
It is impossible to estimate the number of people to whom these lines have brought surcease from anxious thought, replacing any troubled sense with reassurance and comfort, when time and space have seemed to separate them from those dear to them. The same arm of tender, omnipotent care enfolding all! Surely such confidence, with its promise of no division, no severance, its assurance of but the one household of God held in His tender care, is worth striving for and attaining!

The effect of realizing that man as the spiritual idea or child of God is always at home in divine consciousness, cannot be overestimated. It supplies a new standard for ethics and morals. It provides a plumb line for righteous thinking and living by which each suggestion or situation can be appraised. It is an impregnable defense against temptation. Moreover, this realization of true manhood engenders genuine self-respect, supplies poise and balance, and imparts a consciousness of dominion over material conditions which can be gained in no other way. The assurance that "His habitation high is here, and high," and that everywhere we can mentally abide in this secret place of Love's dwelling and there know the true sense of home, heals all feeling of loneliness or isolation. . . . —The Christian Science Monitor.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Christian Science" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, December 29.

The Golden Text was, "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee" (Isaiah 60:1).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matthew 5:14-16).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "If Christianity is not scientific, and Science is not of God, then there is no invariable law, and truth becomes an accident. Shall it be denied that a system which works according to the Scriptures has Scriptural authority?" (p. 342).

Make Your Letter of Application
Tell and Sell

A WELL-KNOWN advertising man once said, "Anything that can be sold at all can be sold by the written word." Certainly it is true that many men have been able to take the first, all-important step in "selling" themselves to an employer by a well-written letter.

The point is to make your letter both tell and sell. Put yourself in the employer's place. "Who are you? What have you done? What can you do that leads you to believe the man you are writing to could use your services with profit to himself?" These are the things that interest the employer and that you must have clear in your own mind before you write your letter.

Remember that you are asking someone to buy your services. The mere fact that you want a job doesn't interest him. You must convince him that the deal will be advantageous from his point of view. Be sure that your letter is neatly written, for your own appearance and other characteristics will be judged by it just as they would be by the manner in which you presented yourself for a personal interview.

An enclosed, stamped, self-addressed envelope makes it easy for your prospective employer to reply, granting you an interview. Further, it is evidence of your ability to put yourself in the other fellow's place, and many great businesses have been built on the ability of those directing them to put themselves in the place of the prospective purchasers and figure out what it is they really need.

Smartness in Dress

Chic, in French artistic slang, is the quality of facile but superficial, brilliance in a work of art, or an effect produced by imagination without reference to a model. In its general sense it connotes smartness in dress. The use of the word in France dates from the reign of Louis XIV, when it denoted a lawyer who was master of chicane or legal trickery.

Milestones of American Genius

DANIEL WEBSTER

THE name of Daniel Webster stands in the American mind not merely for oratory of the highest order, but for that power of speech devoted to the service of the nation. No man in his time inspired our people to a love of country and a profound faith in its immortal destiny more eloquently than did this patriot and political thinker. Webster was born at Salisbury, just outside of Concord, New Hampshire, on January 18, 1782, and his seventy years of life coincided with the formative period of our Republic—from the dawn of the nation to the eve of the Civil War. His memory is preserved in imperishable stone throughout the land, but none of the memorials was erected with greater civic pride than the one standing on the New Hampshire State House grounds in Concord.

As a boy, Webster was delicate and sickly. The amazing mental and oratorical energy which he displayed in his busy life represents a conquest of mind over matter. He attended Exeter Academy and was graduated from Dartmouth College. In later years he defended the charter rights of Dartmouth with magnificent passion.

After being admitted to the bar he quickly built up a lucrative practice. His eloquence attained nationwide recognition. Political prominence was not long in following, and he became a dominant figure in national affairs. Although thwarted in his Presidential aspirations, Webster was a great political power.

His addresses in Congress and on patriotic occasions have become classics which schoolboys of succeeding generations declaimed along with the Declaration of Independence and the Preamble to the Constitution. He died at Marshfield, Mass., which had long been his home, on October 24, 1852.
